Helping Your Community

We are pleased to have you as a PostPoints member and appreciate your interest in helping your community. As a PostPoints member you can earn 25 Points for volunteering your time at various non-profit events such as blood drives, community cleanup, and running events.

Eugene Robinson

Op-Ed Columnist

"The glory of writing for The Washington Post is the opportunity to speak to — and hear from — the most diverse, the best-informed, and basically the smartest group of readers that I know of in the world. Our sense of community in the Washington area encompasses what's happening down the block, what's happening halfway around the globe, and everything in between. It's a privilege to have a conversation with a very special community."

David Ignatius

Op-Ed Columnist

"A newspaper is about creating community. It's a daily conversation about what matters to all the folks standing around the community water cooler. A good newspaper is a big tent, where people can gather to exchange information and occasionally, to shout at each other. Sometimes the Post is a three-ring circus, but it's all happening under that big tent."
